'Travel-Speed' Maps to Show Shrunk World Proposed

S. W. Boggs, State Department Geographer, Urges System to Promote Clear Thinking

Maps of the future will tell you at a glance how long it will take you to get from where you are to anywhere in the world you want to go, says Samuel W. Boggs, State Department geographer, has his way.

It isn't enough, Mr. Boggs believes, for maps just to show distances between places in this age when travel speeds range from 3,000 miles a day, by airplanes, on regular routes, in some parts of the world, down to 15 miles a day, in chairs carried on human backs in other regions.

For instance, you can look at an ordinary map today and see that it isn't much farther from Omaha to Yakutsk in Siberia than it is from New York to San Francisco in the United States, but this gives no idea of the difference in time it would take you to get from one place to the other by regular travel means.

Aside from the convenience to "travel-speed maps," Mr. Boggs is convinced that carrying the idea further to show on maps such things as the speed and cost of various types of communication and transportation of materials would stimulate better understanding of world problems.

Explaining these ideas to a group of geography specialists at the meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in Philadelphia the other day, Mr. Boggs said:

"If the preparation of additional world maps of the types suggested were to stimulate more accurate and intelligent thinking, and to help in seeing things whole, they would serve a very useful purpose."

He suggested that "travel-speed" communications, and other such illustrative maps could be made graphically clear by a method similar to that used in relief maps, in which higher elevations are shown in darker shadings. The areas in which travel is slowest are shown in lighter shadings, where travel is fast in light shadings. The shading of each "belt" between points would represent roughly the miles per day that might be covered by the fastest means of travel available on that route.

Such maps are needed, Mr. Boggs said, to help people generally perceive the extent to which phenomenal increases in the speed of travel and communications, and decreases in transportation costs, have changed the world.

Miss Alice Sullivan Dies; Lifelong D. C. Resident

Miss Alice Marguerite Sullivan, a lifelong resident of Washington and descendant of five generations of Washingtonians, died Friday at her home, 2618 Woodley place N.W., after a short illness.

Daughter of the late Michael P. Sullivan, a merchant here for many years, Miss Sullivan was a great-granddaughter of James Fitzpatrick, a soldier in the Revolutionary War who later served with Daniel Boone in explorations of the West.

Miss Sullivan was active in church and charity work, holding memberships in the Christ Child Society, the Ladies of Charity and the Children of Mary.

She is survived by a brother, Frank M. Sullivan, and two sisters, the Misses Mary Loretta and Regina T. Sullivan, all of this city.

Hazard's Rites Draw Friends Of Better Days

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Jan. 4.—W. Tilden P. Hazard's friends of better days—the stock brokers, clubmen and social registries he once remarked he saw no reason to avoid "because I'm flat"—attended his funeral today in St. Bartholomew's, society's Park avenue church.

Mr. Hazard, one-time wealthy clubman and polo enthusiast, who lost his fortune in the 1920 crash and began life anew a year ago as a grocery store employee, died Thursday after an extended illness. He was the son of the late William A. Hazard, sportsman and salt mine owner.

Mr. Hazard continued to be listed in the Social Register, but dropped memberships in clubs formerly listed after his name. With what money he saved from his fortune he bought a small interest in a grocery store on Third avenue operated by Charles J. Gabrois, who was the family chauffeur in 1925. Mr. Hazard worked on a commission, soliciting new business, and often helped behind the counter.

"It's not as cozy as the old life, but I rather like working for Mr. Gabrois," he once commented.

Frank M. Sullivan, and two sisters, the Misses Mary Loretta and Regina T. Sullivan, all of this city.
